As I walked through the wilderness of this world, I came upon a den and I lay down to sleep. As I slept I dreamt a dream. I dreamt and beheld a traveller wandering upon a road. He had gone but little way when he espied his path diverging before him. A troubled look creased his brow, for he knew not which way to go. He chanced to turn and towards him came an Evangelist clothed in garb bespeaking opulence. Around his waist he bore a pouch containing manuscripts penned by his own hand.

Approaching the traveller, the Evangelist asked, "How art thee called?" Then said the traveller, "I am called Pilgrim." Then spake the Evangelist, "Verily thou seemst troubled." "Sir, I perceive before me two roads and I know not which I should take," replied Pilgrim. Then said the Evangelist, "This road I know and I will show it to thee." Pilgrim asked, "How art thee called that thy word be truth?" The Evangelist replied, "For those who swear by Truth, I am known as Hypocrisy." Then said Pilgrim, "Yet, if thy name be Hypocrisy . . ." But, the Evangelist interrupted him saying, "Beware the rut in the road and heed thy humble guide." Then said Pilgrim, "Then let us be gone."

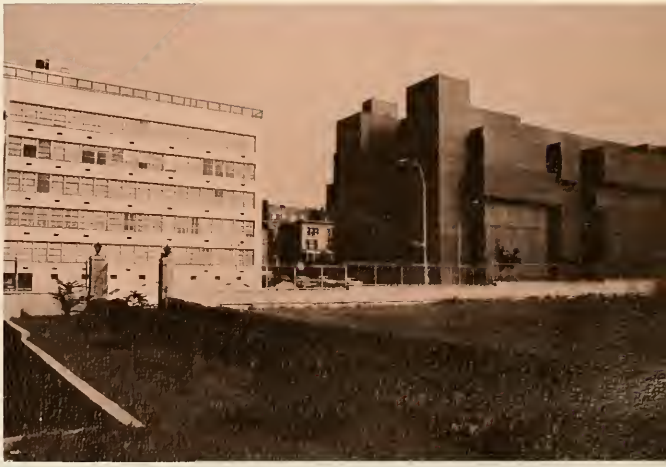
I beheld in my dream that they followed the sloped path through a rough wood. Despite Hypocrisy's assurance, Pilgrim feared dangerous encounters for the country was wild and foreboding. They saw no resting place about, nothing but towering heights, rough crevices and jagged stones strewn about. Along the path flowed a river and I saw that it was murky, green and stank of death. Pilgrim commented, "It is ugly and desolate here and my feet are weary and sore." Hypocrisy replied, "Fear not, for the challenge shall temper thy soul, the road shall callous thy feet and thou shalt be a better man for it." They continued on their way.



Soon they came upon a veritable giant straddling the road. Said Pilgrim, "What mysterious figure looms before us? Verily an impressive person is he, for he greatly towers above us." As the figure approached, it exclaimed reading from a large book, "Follow me through the wilderness; through this uncultivated land." Then said Pilgrim, "How art thee called and from what dost thou quote?" The giant replied, "I am called Piety and I do quote from the wisdom of the ages." Then said Hypocrisy to Pilgrim, "Learned Piety is one of the greatest of men to walk this path. Heed his words." Then said Piety, "I welcome thee to this road of peace. This, my son, shall be thy guidebook, for it is the source of all knowledge." And I beheld that Piety gave to Pilgrim a most ancient volume and it was accepted gratefully. Piety spake unto Pilgrim, "From whence dost thou come?" Pilgrim replied, "I come from the banks of indecision." Piety heaved a great sigh and began, "You are fortunate, my son, for here you will find the Good Life. Upon this road you will learn how to conduct yourself." Thereupon Piety did turn to Hypocrisy and spoke with him quietly. Pilgrim stood aside unable to grasp Piety's whispered words. He did not know what to do with the script, for the words were written in a foreign tongue.

OFFICE OF THE REGISTRAR

He continued down the road leaving his two companions behind. As Pilgrim pondered the strange letters, he chanced to raise his eyes only to find himself face to face with a horrible man who spoke in a rough tone. "Why don't you watch your way?" spake the stranger. Pilgrim replied, "I am lost." The stranger answered, "There is but one road to follow." "But I have left my guide behind," said Pilgrim. The hideous figure replied, "Then you must follow me!" "How art thee called?" asked the Pilgrim. The man replied gruffly that his name was Arrogance.

Pilgrim was coerced into following Arrogance, who never condescended to speak directly to Pilgrim, but rather spoke over his shoulder and out of the side of his mouth.

As Pilgrim stumbled behind Arrogance, he lifted his head and observed a herd of cattle lowing in the grass. And as he drew near the herd he gasped in amazement, for the herd was of a most vivid crimson hue. Pilgrim stepped off the main road into the soft thick undergrowth where the cattle grazed. In a siege of bewilderment, Pilgrim lifted his doleful eyes and asked, "To whom doth such a wondrous herd belong?" Said Arrogance, "Never mind whose property they are. They are here and that is all that matters. They were here before you arrived and they will be here long after you have gone. Your stay here is but a short one, yet your inquiries are endless," Pilgrim asked, "But why have you brought me here?" Arrogance replied, "I am giving you a cow." Then said Pilgrim, "I have no need of a cow." Arrogance persisted, "Thou shall accept what I give thee." Then asked Pilgrim, "But I know not how to care for the beast." Yet Arrogance did give one of the herd to Pilgrim. And I saw that the animal caused much hardship for Pilgrim for it was stubborn. Thereupon Arrogance turned and left Pilgrim with his burden.

As Pilgrim struggled to return to the road, he saw Hypocrisy approaching. Pilgrim wailed, "Lo! I am troubled, for my burdens are many." Hypocrisy replied, "There is no problem, for we will pull the beast along." I beheld that Hypocrisy stood aside and watched as Pilgrim led the cow down the winding path.

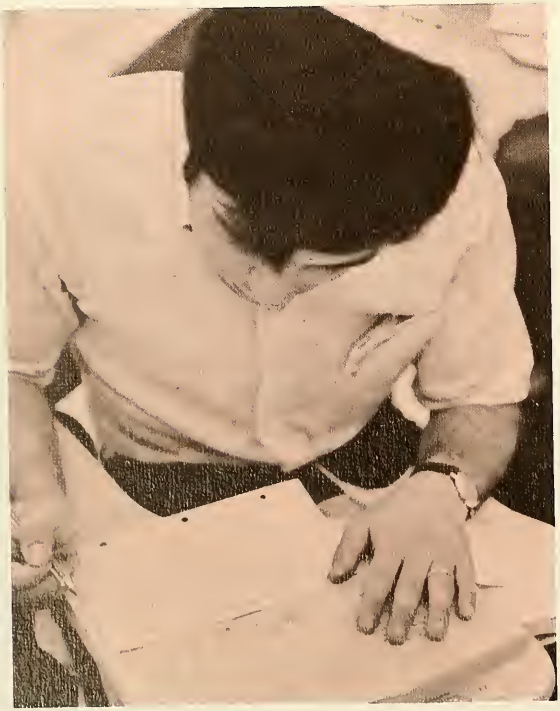
Pointing his finger, Pilgrim exclaimed, "Behold, Hypocrisy, up ahead, what is that structure that blocketh the way? It surely is not like the obstacles we have encountered heretofore. It cannot be of natural creation for it is sharp, angular and lacks Artemis's graceful symmetry. I am hard put to it for I have travelled but little way and now to perceive yet another distress. Woe to me!" Then said Hypocrisy, "Fear naught, for at the gates you shall learn what needs be done."

The grotesque structure consisted of numerous chambers each occupied by various attendants. The buttresses and gargoyles seemed as superfluous and antiquated as the occupants themselves. Each chamber housed a useless sundial which consistently read ten minutes to the hour of five. I saw that the gatekeeper bore the name Incompetence.

As Pilgrim approached the gate, Incompetence beheld him with disdain and began to question him. He asked, "Whence come you and whither are you bound?" Pilgrim replied, "I come from the crossroads and know not where I go." Then said Incompetence, "We will deal with you on the morrow for as you can clearly see, it is ten minutes to the hour of five and I must close for the night."

The Pilgrim was perturbed for it was midday. Hypocrisy allayed his fears, "Beware what you do for you are on the highway of Holiness. We will wait till nightfall, spend the night, and continue our journey afresh in the morning."

Lighting under a shelter, Pilgrim lay awake all night for he was wary of future events. Suddenly, he heard a rumbling in the distance which rapidly drew near. In the dimness he espied a giant strutting down the road. As its immense shadow fell upon Pilgrim, he saw that it was Piety, who crossed the barrier with one great stride. In the process his gown was caught on the spire of the tollgate and it mockingly revealed to Pilgrim a strange undercarriage, for he was a man of small stature wearing stilts. Anxious to have this new mystery explained, Pilgrim quickly woke up Hypocrisy and asked for enlightenment. Hypocrisy responded, "Thou speakest with a grim and surly voice. Thou hast sinned by looking upon the nakedness of Piety." Pilgrim persisted, "But what meaneth those stilts?" Hypocrisy answered, "Your curiosity is a snare and a delusion. The stilts accomplish two things. Firstly, they enable Piety to take less steps. Secondly, they allow him to present a better image to the sundry folk he encounters, thus enabling him to continue his righteous work." Then said Pilgrim, "What is to prevent anyone who knows nothing of righteousness from wearing the cloak of Piety?" Then answered Hypocrisy, "Truly nothing, for if it suits thy whim, then take up a cloak and frock thyself." Thereupon they slept.



THE REVOLT OF THE MASSES

N BOOKS H

At daybreak, Incompetence arose and ordered the travellers to walk in the following order: first the cow, then his pilgrim and finally, Hypocrisy. The cow and the two men went in at the gate and lo! Incompetence declared to the cow, "Enter ye onto the road in service of your master, for blessing and honor and glory and power be unto Him and unto the cow, forever and ever." Just as the gates were opened to let the cow in, Incompetence turned his head to the men and asked, "Why cometh thou hither?" Said Pilgrim, "I come here supposing that entrance would be quickly administered to me."

Once again, Incompetence asked, "Whence come you and whither are you bound?" Then answered Pilgrim, "I come to take the path that Hypocrisy showeth me." Incompetence then asked for Pilgrim's certificate that he might go in. And Pilgrim fumbled in his bosom and found none. Then said Incompetence, "Have you none?" But Pilgrim answered not a word.

Thereupon Incompetence closed the gate. Pilgrim feared that his journey would be curtailed and begged for entrance. Incompetence replied that in such cases he must consult those of higher authority. Pilgrim turned to Hypocrisy and in a mournful tone cried, "I sink in deep waters. All the waves are over my head. Selah!" Then said Hypocrisy, "Be of good cheer my brother. I feel the bottom and it is good. Thou shalt yet complete the journey before thee." Incompetence returned, "There is yet one way by which you may pass." Pilgrim, somewhat strengthened and better able to bear his burdens asked of him, "How may I do so?" Then said Incompetence, "The toll is not as exacting as a pound of flesh. It merely requires a pound of milk." Then begged Pilgrim, "But with what am I to collect it?" Incompetence replied, "I have a vessel for thee." Once more the Pilgrim's eyes lit up with joy and he said, "Pray give it to me that I may soon continue on my way." Incompetence handed Pilgrim a golden sieve. Said Pilgrim, "Lo! I am troubled. What form of vessel do I possess?" Then said Hypocrisy, "Dare you shun such a holy vessel? Take solace in the tradition that passeth through this gate and muse no longer." I beheld that once again the Pilgrim's heart was gladdened. And said Pilgrim, "Now we shall end this haggling and I shall soon be able to pass."

Pilgrim searched for his cow but it had crossed the gate and now grazed on the other side. He said, "How am I to collect my milk if my cow has escaped from me?" Then said Incompetence, "You may cross on condition that you leave behind something of value." Then said Pilgrim mournfully, "I am dreadful of my condition, for I have not a thing of importance." Incompetence asked, "Do you value the vessel now in your possession?" Pilgrim replied, "Yes, but without it, I am lost." "Yes, but if you do not yield it, you may proceed no further," answered Incompetence. Then said Pilgrim, "Yes, but without it I am hindered as well." Incompetence exclaimed, "Do not question my competence!"

Pilgrim reluctantly returned the sieve to Incompetence. Thereupon he crossed the stile and retrieved his cow. He set himself to the task of milking, but found it impossible. He exclaimed, "What a fool I am to attempt to extract this exacting measure. I had no credentials in my bosom, and neither does my bovine companion. Oh! What hardship and terror I have undergone. And now the deepest hurt of all to discover that this animal is as much a cow as I am." At this Incompetence fell into a grievous rage and declared, "Seeing as thou hast disobeyed my counsel it shall be worse with thee than if thee had never been born." Then said Hypocrisy to Pilgrim, "Thou seest that I am still here with thee, a far weaker man by nature then thou art. Do not be afraid for let us exercise a bit more patience. You must understand that Incompetence must not let anyone trespass upon these grounds without having paid his toll." And as he yet spoke, a pitiful figure drew up to the tollgate and without the difficulty that Pilgrim had just met, the gatekeeper helped him cross. Neither did he meet with the least discouragement. But when he came to the gate he knocked at the door, opened it, and passed directly through. I beheld that he was, by nature, cold; his mouth was large, and his belly much would hold. Pilgrim, upset and bewildered, sought an answer to the puzzling occurrence. Hypocrisy quickly responded, "You will later receive the comforts of all your toil, and joy for all your suffering. As for now do not lose faith, nor question others, for here we live by tradition."

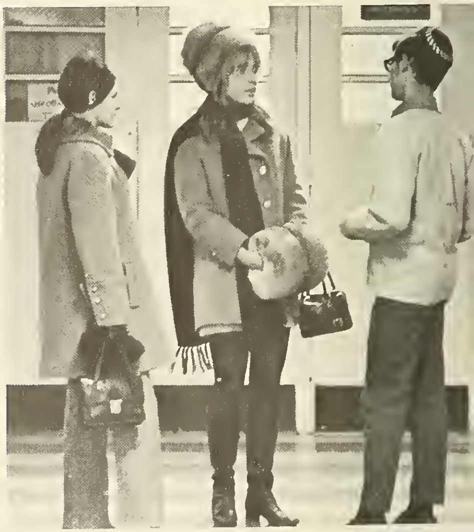
Great darkness and horror fell upon Pilgrim. He began to inquire if there were no other way around the gate, to which Hypocrisy answered, "Yes, but there hath not been anyone permitted to tread that path since its foundation. But if you will, we shall make the attempt, for I am truly your friend." Then said Pilgrim, "Seemingly, thou art." That evening, they prepared to bed down by the road, but in the darkness they took the path around the tollgate. They followed the road throughout the night without much difficulty, for strangely, it bore the tracks of many men and sprouted no undergrowth. As dawn approached, they caught up with the man who had gone through the tollgate effortlessly. Pilgrim asked, "How art thee called?" The stranger replied, "I am known as Inadequacy."



Then asked Pilgrim, "Where are your credentials, for you pass with such ease?" Inadequacy replied, "Just as the rest of the world does." Pilgrim persisted, "But what have you to show at the gate that you pass through?" Inadequacy responded, "I do my best to lead a good life. However, I find that I am missing much, and for this, they pity me and let me pass. My needs, then, are, in truth, my credentials." "What be these needs of which thou speaketh?" asked Pilgrim. Then said Inadequacy, "My life is filled with fear and doubt. I have passions bottled within me, yearning to burst forth, but forced to stagnate. I was given a plow and I toiled all the day and parted the earth, but for what purpose? I was given no seed and what grew wild also died, for I was given no water. They placed me on a farm to learn from the master farmers the way that a field should be tendered in order to flourish. But their words proved empty and void of truth. When I sought their counsel, they were as elusive as the morning dew."

Then said Hypocrisy to Pilgrim, "Nay, heed not his counsel, for his words are those of fools and malcontents. Let us tarry no longer, and be on our way." And I beheld that they continued down the path until they came upon a forest.

They trod onward into the forest all the while feeling the lush, moist undergrowth encompass their steps. The land seemed to have a personality of its own in that each footfall produced a different sensation. Their euphoric state was further increased as they heard soft strains of music coming from a clearing. First a lute then a lyre then both together. The melody, charming both Pilgrim and Hypocrisy, began to quicken in tempo and intensified to a point of departure from anything they had ever heard. It was as if demons, spirits or other forces of the netherworld had composed and performed it solely for the pair's entertainment.

Twixt the sensations of the undergrowth and the sounds of the music, the remainder of their senses were hardly prepared for what they were next to behold. Drawn by the music to a clearing in the forest, there were wisps of smoke swaying to and fro, not concealing, yet not revealing, the wonders to be found in its midst. With the music everpresent in the background, the mist began to rise, and a form began to appear. First, the most perfectly shaped legs, carelessly laid on a couch of white satin. The more the smoke lifted, the more of this wonderful sight they beheld. And still they gazed and still their wonder grew. Not a sound passed between them, only the music with its frenzied tempo. The result of this metamorphosis delighted Pilgrim, for there before him lay the most beautiful woman he had ever seen. Flung there on the satin couch, her eyes closed, she was the embodiment of all things that were right with the world. Her blond hair cascaded over the cushion and onto the ground, now grazing her forehead, now gliding along her cheeks. The tresses framed a sculptured face of winging eyebrows, deep set eyes, a nose made for perfumes and powders and just a hint of a mouth. She slept half childlike and half as a lioness, attesting to the rhythm of life that beat within her. Her form rising and falling in syncopated time with the music; she was her environment and her environment gave her life.

As the rhythm of the music tapered, you could hear the rustling of her crepe gown against the couch. Smooth, yet uncoordinated, movements told the breathless onlookers that she was awakening. Her eyes still closed; she uttered her first words in a soft, breathy tone, as if not to disturb the slightest bit of air surrounding her. "So nice, so very nice, that you have come to me."

Silence belied their admiration for her. She said, "And now fair men, who are you and from whence do you come?" Then said Hypocrisy, "We travel on the great road, Lady, that is beyond the forest. My charge is called Pilgrim, and I am Hypocrisy, his guide. Pray tell, by what are you called?" She said, "I am known as Worldly Wise."

But tell me Sir Pilgrim, you are so much younger do you not find it dull to travel with a man so much older than yourself? Then said Pilgrim, "But he has brought me here and this, I feel, may reimburse me for those times that were not so full of joy. Worldly Wise replied, "Then tell me of your woes on the road, that I might comfort you. They tell me that the travel is wrought with hazards and never one returns unharmed." Said Pilgrim, "It may be true that there were times that I felt it all for naught, but now I have a vision of the future that is far brighter. I feel that you may help to ease the pain of the journey. Worldly Wise responded, "While you are here you will feel no pain. Here you may do what you like.

END THE WAR NOW
VIETNAM MORATORIUM
DATES: OCTOBER TILL THE END OF THE WAR

So Pilgrim dashed off into the forest in the direction of a more pulsating music.

Then said Hypocrisy, "You fascinate me Worldly Wise. I would like to see more of your domain." Worldly Wise replied, "By all means, let us go."

And with a slow, languid motion, she slid from the couch, her gown flowing in graceful pleats behind her. Hypocrisy, taken by her motions, caught himself and began to catch up with her. As they passed a crystal brook hung with multicolored lanterns, the sight drew them closer and Worldly Wise began to explain, "This brook gives off a scent more wondrous than jasmine. It is said the rocks on the bottom are of some magical material which gives off an aroma when touched by water. We come here just to be, to be and nothing more.

They continued on in their exploration of the forest, approaching an orchard of twinkling fruit. Each fruit was a different shape and color and would catch the starlight and reflect it. Hypocrisy spied Pilgrim in the distance. Pilgrim, in the midst of the orchard, sat reclining on a couch, while five young maidens attended to his every wish. Laughing, he called out to them, "Serenity — my head, Terpsichore — the music, Eustance — more food, Rowena — the lights, Norwena — hold me." All this on a spinning couch, mirrored on all sides, which only served to multiply his enjoyment and sensuality.

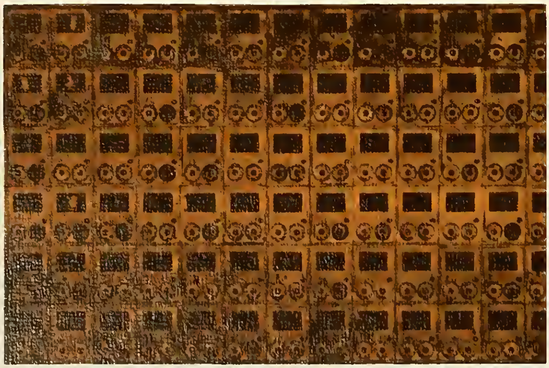
Not wishing to disturb Pilgrim, Hypocrisy made no mention of this to Worldly Wise and the two of them continued on through the night, enjoying all there was to be enjoyed. At dawn, Pilgrim awoke, and went to search out his friend and guide, Hypocrisy. Past the orchards and brooks, through the rays of sun he searched. And following the rays, he was led to Hypocrisy, sleeping under a tree, horns of light radiating from his face. Indeed the tree was light as was the entire ground within close proximity.

Upon awakening, Hypocrisy turned to Pilgrim and the beautious Worldly Wise, and spake unto them, saying, "I charge, thee, friends, pray, let us return to the path which will truly lead us from this heathen wilderness to the land which I have told you of." But the traveller was troubled and was slow to heed Hypocrisy's call. "But sir," he spoke, "I think . . . " "A mistake," muttered Hypocrisy under his breath. But the Pilgrim continued, "I think this forest of lush vegetation suits my desires and therefore see no reason to continue our long and arduous travails." The anger boiled up inside of Hypocrisy and he spoke through clenched teeth, "Your arguments are empty and void of merit, Pilgrim, for you have never seen the land which I have seen. You think only of momentary pleasures, and think naught of the final reward." An ashen look fell across the countenance of Pilgrim, for the harsh words of Hypocrisy troubled him. And thus, the Pilgrim and Worldly Wise continued their journey.

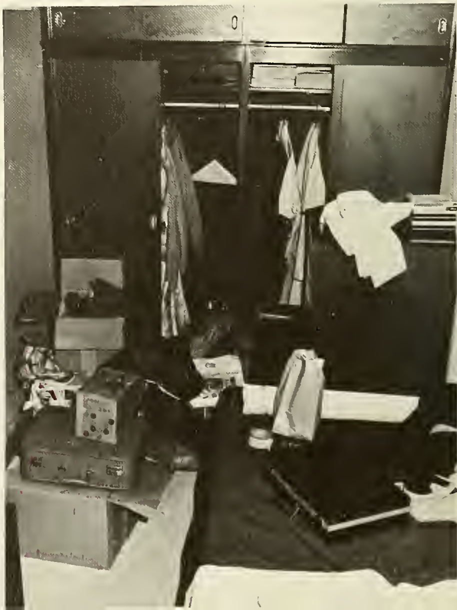
On and on the road wound before them. Each step became labored for Pilgrim. Sweat soon formed rivulets upon his forehead and brow. And soon, Pilgrim raised his head, and lo, before him stood Piety.

As soon as Piety cast his eyes on the form of Worldly Wise, he swooned with the love that welled up inside of him, for the lack of female companionship on the road was of common knowledge. As is the way of the world, this love soon deepened, until Piety could contain himself no longer. "I pray thee," he panted, "be my wife, for I have not seen thy equal in all my travels." And the comely lass seemed stricken with the desirous Piety, for she soon agreed to the match. The joy of Piety knew no bounds. "Let us hurry, for I know of an inn but little way down this road, where we can join our destinies forever." Piety spoke truly, for not too far in the distance, the company perceived a small inn.

RESIDENCE HALL



And the inn was truly a wondrous sight, for Pilgrim had never seen such a structure in his life. In the manner of all inns, a courtyard beckoned the weary Pilgrim. But unlike the usual inn, whose majestic courtyard spread far and wide for the comfort of travellers, the courtyard of this inn was small and cramped, with weeds abounding at his feet.



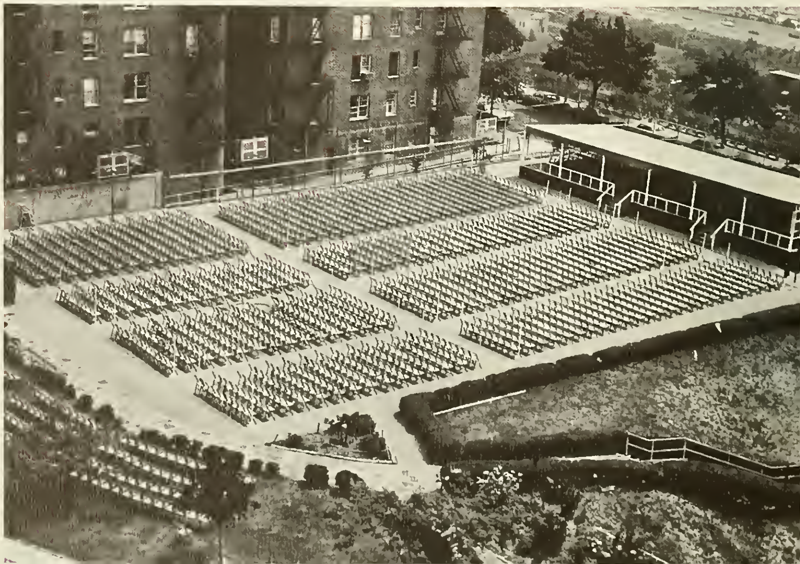
Pilgrim warily entered the great lobby of the inn. Its dank and gloomy interior further depressed Pilgrim, for he had never seen such gloomy surroundings for an inn. The innkeeper, a veritable giant, gaunt and hollow in appearance, was named Gross Incompetence. As he looked around the room, Pilgrim's gaze fell upon an elderly couple sitting in the corner. "Pray tell me, good innkeeper, who are those figures?" "Them," snorted the innkeeper, "they are lonely refugees from life." "But sir," cried the Pilgrim, "should so many strangers abound where paying guests must tread." "And would ye remove them, my inquisitive friend?" asked the innkeeper, handing him a key. "Here! Your room is in the attic."

Thus, Pilgrim began the laborious task of climbing the staircase to his loft. As he reached the top floor, incredible filth greeted his eyes, as did the unmade, unkempt bed. Pilgrim decided to retire early. However, animal-like snoring coming from adjacent quarters made sleep impossible. Finally, as the sun was about to rise, he managed to drift off to the world of sleep.

Minutes later, the door flew open, and in walked a woman, garbed in the rough garb of a chimney sweep. She proceeded to sweep the room, mindful of the sleeping figures by clanging her broom around the room and upsetting the garbage pail in the corner two or three times, at the very least. Finally, after leaving a few clean towels, the mysterious stranger left — only to be followed moments later, by another, who spoke quite rapidly to the Pilgrim in a strange language which he could not fathom.

With that, the stranger opened all the windows to the morning chill, and splashed the room with dirty water, and left. Thus, within a few short minutes, the room, which had previously resembled a dark, dry cave, now resembled a heathen swamp — together with the jungle sounds coming from the next room.

Slowly, Pilgrim journeyed down the steps, and saw Hypocrisy, refreshed by long hours of sleep. "Pray, tell me, how could you sleep through the noise and the storm which fills these rooms?" Hypocrisy smiled, "Why, I am staying at the inn across the road. There the rooms are large, quiet and clean." "Yes, but I could not possibly afford such a luxurious room," cried the Pilgrim. "But fool," smiled Hypocrisy, "the rents are the same!" The Pilgrim was beside himself in rage. He stormed over to the innkeeper. "Sir, I demand a refund, for I am paying the same amount as my travelling companion and yet the rooms are quite different!" The innkeeper replied, "My son, you are a fool, for I must pay by the bed for the inn's accommodations, and so must you."



The following day dawned bright and clear, but as the sun rose in the sky, the heat grew. The innkeeper silently led the wedding party to a grove, where countless places had been set out in the heat of the day. Each seat, fashioned from wood, stood next to the other, like soldiers — row upon row. It seemed to Pilgrim that there were hundreds and hundreds of chairs. He asked Hypocrisy, "Sir, I pray thee, answer my humble question, who is to fill these chairs? Here are the bride and the groom, but where are the guests for these chairs?"

And Hypocrisy turned to the Pilgrim, a fatherly glint in his eyes, and said, "Do not worry my son. The guests will be provided for." The innkeeper led them to a large platform, which stood before them. And the platform was also made of wood, with a canopy of blue canvas. They mounted the steps and began the marriage ceremony. "We ask the aid of Providence in granting happiness to these two children. May their offspring be as numerous as the sands on the beach of time." With that, the party made their way back to the inn to enjoy the marriage repast.

The next morning, Pilgrim was awakened by a strange sound — the cry of a child. As he made his way to the source of the sound, he mused on its source. "Perhaps another couple arrived at the inn during the night." But he was unprepared for the sight he beheld — there lay Worldly Wise — with a child nestled in her arms! "Rejoice," bellowed Hypocrisy, "for Worldly Wise has given birth to a child, and Synthesis is its name!" "The world is turned upside down," mused Pilgrim to himself, for he could not explain the strange occurrence which he had witnessed. "I fear for my sanity." But the strangest thing was yet to come, for Piety grasped the child, and said to Pilgrim, "here, take the child, and raise it as your own, for you shall be helpful for each other." And despite his protests, the parents of the child insisted and pressed the child upon him. With mind still reeling, the Pilgrim returned to his room — the newborn child in his arms.

However, the child proved of little help to Pilgrim, for its cries awakened him at all hours of the night, in the midst of his slumber. Pilgrim arose and spoke to Piety. "Sir, Please take thy son back, for I am both unworthy and sorely in need of sleep." But Piety raised his hand, and spake thus, "The child's needs and your own will not always agree," and with that, turned and left him holding the child. "And what about the mutual benefit you spoke of earlier?" But the figure disappeared and Pilgrim retired to his room.

During the night, Hypocrisy stole into Pilgrim's room and approached the child. Lifting it tenderly in his arms, he smiled and whispered, "My son, first of my strength, how strangely innocent thou art. As you grow, what will become of the innocence that you now so proudly flaunt?" Yet, his voice, though hushed, caught the ear of Pilgrim, who was astounded by the significance of Hypocrisy's words. He contemplated their meaning till dawn.

In the morning, he confronted Hypocrisy with the strange truth that had, so suddenly, been revealed to him. Hypocrisy responded, saying, "It is true. I am the father of the child." Pilgrim replied, "If thou indeed claim that this be true, then I am most perplexed, for when has Hypocrisy told the truth and when has Piety lied? I now know that Synthesis was born of blemished birth and I trust not a soul, other than Worldly Wise." He, thereupon, called to her and begged, "Tell me, please, who is the father of the child placed in my care?" Worldly Wise, at first, tried to avoid the issue, but then responded, "Hypocrisy seduced me in the forest, as his velvety tongue eloquently convinced the both of us that this was the proper course." Pilgrim asked, "Why, then, did you marry Piety?" But, Hypocrisy interrupted, saying, "It was simply to add legitimacy and stature to a preconceived creation."

Pilgrim asked, "But, what is to be with our future?" Worldly Wise replied, "My place is by my husband's side." Hypocrisy declared, "Your journey here is complete and you must proceed to the outside world on your own. Before you continue, let us rejoice and give Thanksgiving, for you have mastered this treacherous path and we credit your accomplishments. Come, let us feast!"

I beheld that they slaughtered the bullock given to Pilgrim by Arrogance, and ate of its flesh. Sated, he arose, bade farewell, and prepared to leave with the child. At the gate of the inn, Pilgrim espied Piety and Worldly Wise blissfully together. He approached the couple and, as a wedding gift, he returned Piety's volume.

Soon after leaving the inn, he came upon a crossroads. Tired from his recent ordeal, he took the child in his arms and sat down to rest. As he came under Morpheus' spell, he dreamt a dream. He dreamt and behold . . .

Now, reader, I have told my dream to thee, see if thou cannot interpret it to me, or to thyself, or neighbor; take heed of misinterpreting, for that, instead of doing good, will but thyself abuse. By misinterpreting evil ensues.

Take heed, also, that thou be not extreme in playing with the outside of my dream, nor let my figure or similitude, put thee into laughter or a feud. Leave this for boys and fools, but as for thee, do thou the substance of my matter see?

What if my dullness thou findest there, be bold to throw it away, but yet preserve the gold. What if my gold be wrapped up in ore? None throws away the apple for the core. But if thou shalt cast all away as vain, I know it will make me dream again.

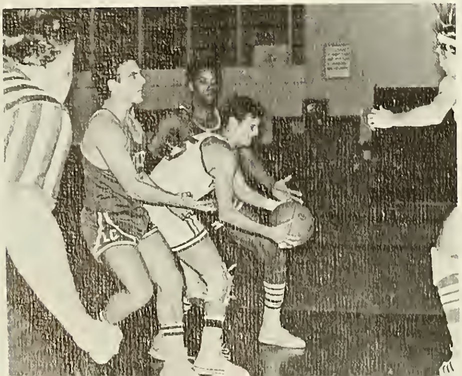
See number 43.
He looks tired.
He has classes from nine to seven.
Practice from eight to ten.
Schoolwork from ten to one.
Very tired.

See our home court.
See our other home court.
See all our home courts.
Our home court is in the Bronx.
In Queens.
In the five boroughs.
We have a big campus.



See our team.
See the other teams.
The other teams win.
Our team wins, too.
Sometimes, three.

Yeshiva is a big school.

Yeshiva is so large, it needs two basketball teams.

We have the Mighty Mites.

We have the Balanced Basketball Team.

We have a Senate.

The Senate cannot play basketball.

See our wrestling coach.

He is young.

He has spirit.

He is optomistic

He is new at Yeshiva.

Give him time.

See the City ballplayer.
